Environmental Education at its best!

Why is it better to buy local food?

It is better for your health because local food may retain more nutrients. The food is fresher and tastier because there is no need to have trucks travel long distances to reach their point of distribution before being sold. More often, the food ripens naturally if sold locally as opposed to coming from warehouses.

It is better to buy local foods because the fruits and vegetables are picked at its peak. The closer the food is produced locally, the fresher and tastier it will be. Buying foods locally may offer more variety, offer more convenience, offer better quality, and may save money.

According to Food Routes, other reasons for buying local foods helps to strengthen the local economy, supports family farms, safeguards your family's health and protects the environment.

It is important to keep our businesses profitable and keep our currency in the community. Keeping food dollars local in our community will in turn help our community's tax base as well as provide social community support to our local businesses. Buying local also preserves our farms.
